

FORMER OCEANGATE EMPLOYEE CALLS THE TITAN A 'LEMON'. GETS FIRED!

A picture from inside the TITAN by Oceangate

A former employee of OceanGate has said that the Titan submersible was not safe to dive, and compared it to a "lemon," according to The New Yorker. The Titan was destroyed in a catastrophic implosion, killing OceanGate CEO Stockton Rush, British billionaire Hamish Harding, French diver Paul Henry Nargeolet, and Pakistani businessman Shahzada Dawood and his son, Suleman. Former director of marine operations and chief submersible pilot, David Lochridge, was allegedly fired after expressing concerns about the testing protocol at his company. In an email exchange with deep sea exploration specialist Rob McCallum, Lochridge revealed his fear of retaliation from influential and wealthy individuals within the company if he voiced his concerns over the safety of the submersible. Lochridge claimed that the submersible was not safe to dive, referring to it as a "lemon." Lochridge's lawyers argued that he was wrongfully terminated after discovering a lack of non-destructive testing on the submersible's hull. The lawsuit stated that paying passengers were unaware of the experimental design, absence of hull testing, and the use of hazardous flammable materials within the submersible.

"HE WAS UNDER PILE OF BODIES": ODISHA TRAIN ACCIDENT SURVIVOR MISTAKEN FOR DEAD

In the aftermath of the tragic Odisha train accident, a heart-wrenching incident came to light in Kolkata. Helaram Mallik, the father of a survivor named Vishwajit, revealed that his son was mistakenly placed among the dead, with bodies piled upon him. Determined to find his son, Mallik embarked on a 230-kilometer journey to Balasore and eventually located him alive in a makeshift morgue. Biswajit had suffered multiple bone injuries and underwent surgeries at SSKM Hospital. Mallik expressed his pain and relief, stating that the incident was extremely distressing, but he was grateful to have found his son. The accident occurred when the Coromandel Express collided with a stationary freight train, causing derailments and subsequent collisions. The resumption of services for the ill-fated Coromandel Express was scheduled for Wednesday.

IS UNRECORD TRAILER REAL?

Unrecord is a tactical FPS that tells the story of a police officer from the perspective of his body cam. The game became a sensation last week, sparking debates about its authenticity and choice of subject matter. The video game trailer that racked up more than 70 million views on Twitter is not a hoax. The realism of the game is all thanks to the body-cam camera angle and the movement and mechanics of the game.

BOLT..

*wasn't just a golden labrador
who roamed across Meluha, majestically accessing the highs and lows, his searching eyes awaiting pampering playful taps, the cozy sidewalks witnessing his lazy naps, oblivious to the barks Blacky or Brownly shower...*

*Bolt wasn't just a friendly neighborhood dog neither bora nor broasted meat could shake, but the guard volunteered to protect students walking back to hostels from evening study hours, or during their games.
You would see him sleepy all the time, and you may even have wondered 'such s lazy beast', yet, haven't you once atleast thought how you seem to run into him every corner you walk!
He was the fluffy stress buster for many,
and a true friend to all.*

That may be why i didn't hear Blacky or Brownly yelping, why? shouldn't true friends mourn over their loss!
